Football fans attending games at Ralph Wilson Stadium will be able to dine on more than just hot dogs, popcorn and various beverages. . . . A lot more.

Delaware North Cos.' Sportservice, which handles the food and beverage operations at the stadium, has tweaked its game-day menu for both the concession stands and the private suites.

In playing off of its partnership with the Food Network, Delaware North is bringing Buffalo brisket sandwiches to the stadium along with such local speciality items as a Polish Dog, nacho grande featuring chili, salsa and jalapenos peppers and larger slices of pizza and hot dogs.

Beef-on-weck sandwiches from the Red Osier restaurant in Batavia will be sold by Delaware North. Delaware North will also be selling kettle corn and cotton candy.

Beers such as Pabst Blue Ribbon and Stella Artois will be sold in cans.

Inside the stadium's club suites, menu items such as the Food Network's beer-braised pulled pork, chicken sandwiches with caramelized onions and Swiss cheese and blackened salmon will be sold. Gluten-free and no-sugar-added items will also be available.

In the Jim Kelly Club, Delaware North will sell an "oversized" corned beef on rye sandwich. Food offerings for the stadium's private suites have also been upgraded. Among the new items suite holders can order include: nacho potato skins, stuffed banana peppers, antipasto salad and roasted garlic and pancetta dip.

Also new for suite holders include burger sliders, "Buffalo Bills" special ribs and chicken mac and cheese.

Delaware North is also tweaking and adding food items at other NFL stadiums where it handles food and beverage sales. At the MetLife Stadium, home to the New York Jets and New York Giants, fans there can purchase Italian pork sandwiches or pepper and egg sandwiches.

In the Cleveland Browns Stadium, concession stands will sell such items as a jumbo bratwurst topped with peppers and onions and smoked turkey sandwiches.

The intent is localize food offerings, said Rick Abramson, Delaware North Sportservice president.

"Our chefs emphasize local foods and ingredients and provide football fans with menus that go well beyond traditional stadium fare," Abramson said.
